Inside Secrets Of Kennedy Consulting:

How Clients' Sales And Profits Are Multiplied, Problems Solved

Special Report by Dan Kennedy Copyright-Free: Reproduce & Distribute Freely

THE CASE OF THE DYING AD

Often, a business' ad will work well for a while, then begin "wearing out". Because good ads aren't easy to come by, I want my clients to extend the life of the ads as long as they can. In one instance, a client had a full-page magazine ad that had appeared in the same magazines month after month for several years, and results were waning. I had the client shrink the ad enough that a 2" wide border was created all the way around it. Across the top, we added this headline: YOU'VE SEEN THIS AD. THESE PEOPLE ANSWERED IT. Then, down both sides and across the bottom, little photographs of happy buyers with their enthusiastic testimonials. This brought the results of the ad back up to the peak period from two years prior.

THE CASE OF THE AD THAT WORKED TOO WELL

A local company had a newspaper ad I'd designed that worked too well. Every time it ran in the city's newspaper, they were so deluged with business the next day and for ten days or so afterward, they couldn't handle it and a lot of good prospects went to waste. We switched the ad to an FSI, a free-standing newspaper insert, which is delivered loose, inside the paper; they paid to have them inserted by area of the city in rotation, roughly 1/3rd of the circulation every 3 weeks, stabilizing the response at a level they could manage.

THE CASE OF THE $1,000.00 PLASTIC CARD

A restaurant owner needed $100,000.00 fast (reason not important). At my suggestion, he created a "VIP CLUB CARD" that gave its holder $2,000.00 worth of meals, appetizers, etc. spaced over 24 months (with much of the redemption cleverly structured to actually spark other spending. Example: free dinner on birthday, free dinner on wedding anniversary), privileged access to closed-door events (wine-tasting night; Super Bowl party), and other benefits, then sold that card to his best customers. In 19 days, he sold 114 cards at $1,000.00 each.

THE CASE OF THE INEFFICIENT SALE

A client was making about $25,000.00 a month, but had "capped out", as he was personally closing every sale one-on-one, usually via a lengthy telephone conversation, sometimes two or three such conversations. He was adamantly opposed to adding salespeople. Worse, he was only getting one out of every seven prospects who initially requested his information to the point of having a discussion with him. At my urging, he implemented a group "telephone seminar" promoted once a month, to all his unconverted leads. His income went to $40,000.00 a month immediately. Incidentally, I have dozens of private clients and hundreds of Inner Circle Members profitably using tele-seminars, in many, many different businesses.

THE CASE OF THE REINVENTED BUSINESS

In my famous Magnetic Marketing System (www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>)) I show the "Giorgio letters", in which a restaurant is reinvented as a "romance destination". One of my clients, Mike Storms has a karate school with over a dozen very close competitors; his is the highest priced of any of them; most successful; and driven by referrals. He is able to charge premium prices and operate a super-profitable business, in part, due to re-invention or re-positioning; he does not sell karate; he sells "safer, smarter, more respectful kids" who have healthy self-esteem and excel academically.

ADDITIONAL STRATEGIES:

Follows, an assortment of articles or excerpts of articles from previous issues of the NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER representative of strategies Dan regularly assists his clients in implementing. Unlike this brief, introductory Report, and the above case histories, the LETTER features actual examples with "exhibits" showing the businesses' ads, letters, etc., and full names, locations, types of businesses, stories in the owners' own words.

UNIQUE SELLING PROPOSITION

(For more information, the book Ultimate Marketing Plan) Unique Selling Position/Proposition Vs. Dumb Slogans How To REALLY Differentiate Yourself In The Marketplace.

Christmas arrived early with an article FAXed to me by Gold+ Member Chris Di Re, reporting on an extensive survey to measure the impact of advertising slogans. Among the slogans and advertising tag lines for 22 of the biggest U.S. advertisers, only 6 were recognized by more than 10% of the consumers surveyed. In other words, not even 1 out of 10 consumers could correctly identify 90% of the slogans. 16 of the 22 advertisers had slogans no one knew each spending more than 100-million dollars a year advertising them!

Three of these much advertised slogans scored 0% recognition. 0%!

Take the test, see if you can name any of the big, dumb companies that match these slogans: (Answers at bottom of page).

1. We're With You
2. That Was Easy
3. The Stuff Of Life

Only Wal-Mart's "Always Low Prices" was recognized by 64% of the consumers tested. (And by the way, if you can't have the lowest prices, you might as well be the highest. Not much cache in "Almost Always Almost Lowest Prices Most Days".)

Those faring poorly, like #1 above, argued that they'd only been advertising their slogan for TWO YEARS!!!! and, quote, "it takes time to build brand identity." #3's spokesman justified their disaster as "only a transitional slogan", stating they were moving toward yet another new brand-focused identity, whatever the bejeezus that is. Translation: new slogan being thunk up.

The real laughter is that the copy of this article Chris sent me was from USA TODAY's web site, and at its end, two companies paid to advertise their services, doing, yep, "corporate branding."

Bonus: Answers To E-mail Questions From Teleseminar For NO B.S. BUSINESS SUCCESS BOOK

Q Is there such a thing as a totally automated business?

A Just as the former President parsed the meaning of the word is, might I manipulate totally? Many businesses get very, very, very close. In true direct marketing businesses, orders are generated by ads that do not change and run in the same media month after month, by direct-mail, by web sites, etc. that are on auto-pilot; orders taken by 800# call centers, online, received by FAX or mail; routed or forwarded to a fulfillment center; money automatically deposited in the bank account; orders shipped all without involving the business owner. In a wider variety of businesses, parts of the business are automated. For example, many businesses and sales professionals following my strategies, and working with the vendors I recommend,

(<http://www.nobsbooks.com/freebonus/time-management.html>)

Q What one thing would you say is most important to do, in living a life based on decisive, deliberate action rather than reaction?

A Most fully trained MLMs all the while doing the same business. At risk of oversteering, I don't do sales, or other marketing or prospects to reach an 800# or to a website. I request information, such as a flyer, report that information is emailed by a service or I send one every few weeks. I am not mailed on a pre-determined schedule, automatically. For one thing, they define themselves and their businesses differently. Another, they engage in what I described as Future Banking in a very practical value, of the theoretical way. Another, they have a radically different approach to their time than most. Delegating to others is the key, summarize ALL of the NO B.S. MARKETING and that is a point to be made to emphasize. I have said it and said so much that I have relatively ignored, could be important. But I have taken initial calls from prospects personally, and I have made a series of have been prospects jump through. Finally, I have done and where are the in the people who have my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTERS tend to be information marketers utilizing the Internet, like Yanik Silver, who contributes a monthly article to my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER.

(<http://www.nobsbooks.com/freebonus/sales-success.html>)

(<http://www.nobsbooks.com/freebonus/bonus-qa.html>)

Q In trying to reach niche markets, say, parents with children with learning challenges, what innovative ways might you recommend and how might your strategies help?

A There's a very specific marketing question. I'll begin by applauding and advocating niche-ing. There ARE riches in niches. If you read my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER, you've been getting quite a bit of information about this in recent months and it's going to continue. A word of caution: in most cases, a niche market needs to be affordably reachable. Those are important words. If you have to go on national TV or in USA Today to advertise for concerned parents with children with learning challenges, the waste is great, cost too high. The ideal niche market congregates they subscribe to a magazine just for them, belong to organizations, are on specific mailing lists. So, you need to thoroughly research a market to find such media. One of the free gifts for buyers of the NO B.S. BUSINESS SUCCESS BOOK is a research guide. There are only two ways or categories of ways to reach this or any market: you use lead generation advertising, pretty much as described in the NO B.S. SALES SUCCESS BOOK, to ferret them out of a general population, or use others mailing lists comprised only of them.

The Internet offers some additional opportunity, as people go there to search for information about many very specific health and life issues. One of our NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER columnists, Yanik Silver, has a protégé making money with a web site selling information only for people with one particular compulsive disorder. However, you do NOT want to be limited to online marketing.

Q Does your material address the MLM / Network Marketing business?

A My own consulting clients, at the corporate level, have included Amway, New Vision, Rexall and others, and many of our Inner Circle Members are involved in network marketing businesses. Certainly, both the TIME MANAGEMENT and SALES books are directly apropos, and the strategies presented in them can have positive impact on your success in such a business.

Q Please talk about how premium pricing conflicts with the acquiring of new customers?

A It does not necessarily conflict at all. In fact, the idea you must discount to get customers is erroneous. A lot of this has to do with the customers you target. After all, Wal-Mart and Nieman-Marcus coexist in retail, and Nieman's prices do not interfere with their acquisition of customers. A similar example: a cup of coffee. Dennys, 7-11 and Starbucks. And, in many businesses, premium pricing (and superior margins) provide enormous advantage in new customer acquisition because you can spend more to get the customer!

Q How do you convince someone who

By the way, I was also asked on the call about Jay Abraham. I've been on two programs with Michael Gerber and frequently recommend his book. Similarly, I've always found Jay's material interesting and useful. It's my observation that exceptionally successful, and could only answer a few in the call. I've answered many successful entrepreneurs are exceptionally aggressive at acquiring information that is answered here, or one I judged too complex or and processing information from a wide variety of sources. Often, I consulting! The Q/A is in random order, as they came in may very well be saying the same thing as some other author,

A speaker. In fact, you guys need him desperately! (kidding). Sure or first off, your situation actually lends itself perfectly to my kind of call and would reiterate, is reflection of what I hear most from Takeaway Selling, because you do custom projects. You can only do business owners going to some of these other experts' seminars, so many. Demand for you exceeds your number of openings per coaching programs, etc., they tell me, everyone else is more year, so reserving your time far in advance is vital, to avoid being conceptual; I am more practical, down to earth, focused on specific turned away. As analogy, I only take a limited, shrinking number of things to do. Further, I'd point out that no one else I know who writes, clients for one or two day private consultations, so as early as 2003, speaks, teaches and coaches entrepreneurs also CURRENTLY I collected fee deposits for 2005 dates to be named later. Second, works hands-on, closely with anyone here as many business owners on a day to day basis. I'm also something of a cycle! you need to design a program that shortens your sales cycle appreciably. Such as a 36 month program of preparation for optimum these books are only ten bucks each in my newsletter, very inexpensive. Now, back to the NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER for just a second. In this monthly Letter, which I say is a seminar in every issue, I expand on marketing, sales and entrepreneurial issues, including those I presented in my original NO B.S. MARKETING 2nd edition. I cover your business, selling and sales to the extent my 10 chapters miss an issue, you send it and I will be happy to send you a complimentary three new books, going up for NO B.S. time - monthly dance membership (including a calendar and the monthly audio tape. Oh, and a

A That's takes you get the books. Or go to books which is bad. The bad noble Drexel's old Barnes & Noble store another bookstore more specific, let me first say that I have plenty of background in your industry. My corporate consulting clients have included Amway and NewVision. I have produced audio recruiting tapes of which more than 3-million copies have been put in use. And my private clients have included top distributors in four different companies. You have, of course, two sales functions in MLM: hopefully retail, and second, recruiting. Most emphasize the second so, due to time, I'll restrict my answer to that. With recruiting, Takeaway Selling is vitally important, and everything in the book about Lead Generation applies as well. To really grow and stay sane, you must follow these ideas and examples, and devise an automated system that attracts good leads, repels bad leads, screens leads, pre-sells leads, and has people ultimately asking you to meet or talk with them about your opportunity, and use this as replacement for manual labor prospecting. To be fair, this does require monetary investment, for which there's little or no instant recapture, as you're compensated only on those who prove

Q (From: Mike Eastham, CPA: Your Home, Your Money Show, AM 950 WTLN) How do your business philosophies differ from David Allen, author of Getting Things Done?

A First, I'd rather discuss practices than philosophies. I think success is mostly about behavior. I know David, in fact, he and his wife came to me for a day of consulting about their business last year. From his book you mentioned, and our discussions during that day, I'd say we certainly agree more than we disagree. Specific to the subject of getting things done, my NO B.S. TIME MANAGEMENT BOOK FOR ENTREPRENEURS is what you would want to read and, if you like, compare. I would note that David has worked more with people in corporate environments, I more with solo entrepreneurs, and I believe different practices are required. My own TIME strategies are more radical than his. Our objectives are the same: control, sanity, productivity. And ultimately I try to refrain from prescribing a one-size-fits-all solution, MY solution, preferring to guide people to finding what works for them. If you are interested in a very, very thorough discussion of all my philosophies and practices, go to www.renegademillionaire.com (<http://www.renegademillionaire.com/>).

Q (From: Mclvisionary) "How do you feel about John Reese hitting $1-million dollars in sales in one day on the Internet? How do you feel about the Internet?"

A My feelings and thoughts - about the Internet are included in the SALES book and in the NO B.S. BUSINESS SUCCESS book. Please read both. Personally, as I explain in the TIME book, I refuse to use the Internet, although I have it used for me, to make money as you can see. And quite a few Internet marketers seek my advice often. Corey Rudl and Yanik Silver are in my Platinum Inner Circle. I know John Reese and I believe John would tell you he has learned a few things from me. I spoke at an Internet marketing conference for Ken McCarthy last year, by the way, and if you contact Ken, he has a tape of my presentation that might interest you. I'd add, there are lots of ways to make a million in a day, couple days, and I and clients of mine have done it before John did, and will again. I, of course, congratulate John; the marketing campaign you refer to was brilliantly executed. But the secret is NOT the media used. If you want to get into the position to periodically give yourself huge paydays, you'll focus on markets, customers, relationships, and strategic alliances, not any one particular media. And I would URGE you to attend the Blueprint Seminar and maybe the entire Info-Marketers' Summit, info at www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>). Also, look into my newsletter only for info-marketers, the NO B.S. INFO-MARKETING LETTER, at www.petetheprinter.com. Oh, and our regular NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER includes a monthly how-to article from another top Internet marketer, Yanik Silver, and you can get a 3-month free trial sub to that, at www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>).

Q (From: Lawrence Penilla, Wells Fargo Home Mortgage) "Are your books available as audio books?"

A No, they are not, and I have no idea if or when they might be. Please read them you'll find they're easy reading, fun, entertaining. I promise! But, if you want my entire, all-encompassing approach to entrepreneurial, marketing and sales success in audio, go to www.renegademillionaire.com (<http://www.renegademillionaire.com/>), and consider obtaining that complete audio-based system. Also, the free 3-month trial Gold Membership includes a monthly audio program (go to www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>)). Thanks for asking.

Q (From: Keith @ moneynet.com) "You suggest not having to prospect, with the information in your SALES book. How proven is this method? Do you believe your teaching will change the

A Second question first: no, I have no illusions about nor interest in transforming the entire field of sales, or any hunk of it. People cling to the familiar. And I have avoided trying to open or change closed minds. In fact, avoiding that is part of what I teach! I have made a very fine living helping a teeny-tiny percentage of progressive, open-minded, change-embracing people, and make a point of only

Q (Sales field/ Edith Harrington) The strategies you talk about seem to be for established businesspeople. How can a new businessperson use your techniques?

A Your question suggests are already off base. I am a developer of industries, fields that have been so extensively affected by the kinds of marketing and advertising prospecting that it is very visible to everyone and talked about in your state, for example, lead generation and telemarketing methods, including Craig Preston, have had huge impact required. But a lot of new business people are teaching my methods like Dr. Ben Altadonna, the impact is so far reaching you can't hang up, Ben continued to think they must somehow earn the right to exist, to be three city newspapers without finding at least one of our lead generation ads. In insurance and financial services, I, along with Jeff Paul, Pamela Yellen, Michael Jans, Dennis Tubbergen and Michael Waters, have had sufficient impact that every burg, town, city has at B.S. books, another of my books, THE NEW PSYCHO-CYBERNETICS, a book by Robert Ringer, WINNING THROUGH INTIMIDATION, a book by Stuart Wilde, WHEN THEY SHOW UP, Bill LEM and after all those, if you're ready for some really strong old-fashioned prospecting in favor of these methods. Significantly, you would find they often are in the top 1%, 2% or 3% in terms of income as well. You have to understand that every industry, every company, sales organization within an industry, is an income/success pyramid with a huge crowd at the bottom, a small number at the top, and foolishly, the majority always emulate the majority.

Q (From: JoAnne Ryser) "I tried to purchase your books at Barnes & Noble in Spokane, Washington this past weekend. The NO B.S. TIME MANAGEMENT was there. They won't have SALES until sometime later this month he couldn't tell me exactly when. Is the book available elsewhere sooner?"

A Really, you no longer have to be smart to work in a bookstore! Because your question mirrors many, here's the answer: the publishing industry is the most screwed up industry on earth, and its distribution arm bookstores and online - is its most screwed up part. produce a top-earning champion with outstanding quality of business. Nothing suggests are solved with my methods, the entire book and internet information with all the people like they despise the store, and now. The books are all on the books in my Pan of August 1st and I am, Barnes & Noble in fact, the books are in all the other stores, the people buy and sell. However, each store is the store and the books are mostly sold on a daily basis or its day for the shop, more than what I can work with the changes for you to pick up at the store, or by your office or home at www.dankennedy.com (online at Barnes & Noble) or amazon.com. Frankly, they're not the easiest places to buy books. Incidentally, transforming the entire sales field would actually be either, and both have had inaccurate information posted at different counter-productive for me, my network of consultants, my clients, and my Members for people like you, who might "get it Bluntly, we benefit daily communicating with the major chains and the online booksellers, from the stubborn, stuck ignorance and stupidity of the masses. I've corrected their miscues, and improving the ease with which books can be bought. Few authors pay as close attention as I do or have adopted my strategies.

Oh, and there's a lesson here for everyone about their businesses: if you could be invisible and eavesdrop on what your employees are saying, in person or on the phone, to your customers and prospects, you'd have a heart attack everyday. That's why all smart business owners use a lot of "mystery shopping. And there's a lesson here for manufacturers dependent on others distribution channels: exert as much control, do as much monitoring, have as much open communication with the end user customers as possible.

By the time the main marketing and promotion cycle for these books end, I expect to sell more than 100,000 of them. Half will be thanks to the distribution, half will be inspite of it!

Q (From: Gael Bertolino) "So, what is Dan Kennedy doing for Chauncey Hutter these days?"

A Gael is in the tax prep business. Chauncey is a consultant, marketing advisor and coach to that industry, and owns 20+ offices of his own. Gael, Chauncey's a member of my Platinum Inner Circle Group,

Q (From: Debby Smith) "I'm a real estate agent. Can you give me an example of Takeaway Selling for my business?"

A There was a 2005 example in the NO B.S. SALES BOOK. And, the answer to the prior question is available on the information page, a specifically for your business. But here, you ask a question and emphasize even more important points as well as you do. You need a personal and able even easier to TRANSLATE strategies from outside your own industry, a preparation of time. There are a lot of people who take my methods to different niche fields, such as retail store owners, restaurant owners, auto repair shop owners, chiropractors, and study my monthly NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER, exposure to a diversity of what works. When you stay focused inward, paying attention only to what's going on inside your own field, you participate in what I call "marketing incest", with the same result as generational incest: everybody gets dumber and dumber. Examples of their newest successful strategies, ads, sales letters, etc. often are featured in my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER, which you can get your 3rd book free at www.dankennedy.com.

ANSWERS TO E-MAIL QUESTIONS FROM TELESEMINAR FOR NO B.S. TIME MANAGEMENT BOOK

From Dan Kennedy

I got hundreds of questions e-mailed to the conference call, and could only answer a few in the call. I've answered many more here. If yours isn't here, it's probably a duplicate of one that is answered here, or one I judged too complex or inappropriate for a brief answer and I don't do free consulting! The Q/A is in random order, as they came in.

Q (From: Wendy Hugh, PCC, CSP)
"When working from a home office how to approach a significant other to help with management of time, not interrupting your day with mundane things, etc.?"

A First, my caveat. Not long ago, my 22 year marriage ended. I've never held myself out as a relationship expert. However, I've always worked in a home office. My ex-wife understood and was cooperative. As I'm answering this, my current significant other is upstairs in my home, divorced for the day, and she gets it. One of the things I do is let the other person in on my workload for the day and week ahead, at least in broad terms, how I have my time committed and planned and when we will have time together, when I will have time for household matters. I don't think most of the strategies I advocate in my book change from significant other to client to vendor to employee. You train the people around you in the way you want to be treated, communicated with and related to. It helps, of course, to be involved with capable people, and in terms of personal relationship, with someone who has interests, things to do, and is not excessively dependent on you for their life. I learned as a young boy that certain times when my father went to the home office and closed the door, that he was uninterruptible for anything short of fire. At other times, the door was open and it was okay to wander in and out, watch, carry on conversation. Ultimately, time vampire behavior as I describe in my book is time vampirism regardless of who's sucking the blood. It has to be stopped. Gently if possible, firmly if necessary.

Q (From: Linn Marie Borrill, Beyondlimits.com) "What is your opinion of David Allen's stuff?"

A I answered that for somebody else, and the answers in the SALES questions and answers. I'd add, it's nice to see David's popular. I'm a very, very serious student of this subject, so I have and sometimes re-read classics, like Lakein's How To Get Control Of Your Time And Your Life as well as new stuff, like David's. I have an arsenal of reliable strategies that work for me, that I stick with, that I describe in my book. But, like all highly successful entrepreneurs, I also live the principle of the slight edge. That means, I'm always on the look-out

Q (Mark Halpert, 3dlearner.com) "If there was one item we could implement today that would demonstrate the value of your methods, what would it be?"

A Why didn't you ask to just come to the house and see what I do? I have a good gene. I thought I'd make a post $25,000.00 on the ad % improvement is not always going to be the way they're $250,000.00, it's a lot of different, potentially 10-15% ideas, and I'm not going to try to make 2.5 million or the total time, time & between is also more interesting. Also, the more reading on hearing a, having good jokes to go to, the more time, the more easy, possible for people to question different networks, for different folks, number of things, the thing is making a good use of the time, value priority of things and Dave's work has been able to meld with the way I work.

Q (Jeff Nelson, Jeff4realestate@aol.com) "After reading your book, it appears that one of your most powerful techniques is your self-imposed shotgun under the chin, scheduling actions to times, and blowing your head off if you break your word with yourself. Please comment"

A Well, there's another answer for Mark Halpert. I'll make several points. First, I find it odd that people take the commitments they make to others more seriously than they do the commitments they make to themselves. Reverse that, you'll instantly be more successful. Somebody will break the speed limit, risk ticket or accident, and send their blood pressure through the roof racing to keep a lunch appointment, even when it is unimportant. But something they promised themselves they'd do Friday, ah well, there's always Monday. To me, odd. I think integrity starts in your relationship with yourself. Second, I work against the clock. For example, that's how I write. If I'm writing a sales letter for a client, as I did this morning, I pre-determine the time it should take, lock in that time block, and then write to beat the clock. Most people are much more casual about their work. My friend, a great ad copywriter John Carlton says that the deadline is the greatest invention of all time because, without it, few other inventions would exist. Third, as you know from the book, I treat time seriously. It's that simple.

Q (Heather Floyd) "I've tried time-blocking and haven't been able to make it work. What's your secret?"

A My answers to Wendy and Jeff apply. Bluntly, the strategy works. But only if you hold yourself accountable for making it work. You may need a more appropriate and protected place. You may need to lock the cellphone away. You may need to reward and penalize yourself. You may just need more legitimate self-motivation. My speaking colleague Jim Rohn often says the reason more people aren't millionaires is that they don't have enough reasons. It's not lack of opportunity or tools or information. It's reasons. I think there's a lot to that.

Q (Dennis Hester) "I want to work full-time as a writer and speaker. how do I get on the speaking circuit. what topics would be best?"

A Lots of bad news for you. There is no such thing as a speaking circuit. And topics are the last thing to figure out. Market or markets gets figured out first. And you need a reason to exist in a chosen market, other than what you want to do. By reason to exist, I mean you came from there and have proven success strategies and a success story to share. Or you have found, devised, built a magic solution to their most pressing problem. A reason to be there, taking up space, asking for money. There are lots of ways to get a business going, that includes, and is fueled by speaking. Too complex to explore here. I have complete courses and marketing systems for speakers and info-marketers, through www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>). But I will emphasize, the market is the key. Then the marketing.

As an aside, the topics you listed (which I did not list here) are all "soft, vague, unfocused, and already being talked about by thousands. When you do get to topics, you will need to find your own unique language, approach, gap to fill. Finally, I will caution you: unless you are an ex President, serial murderer or similar celebrity, you will not make serious income from speaking fees. You will need information products, platform selling skills, and other streams of income tied to information products. The fact that you may be as

"Describe a day in your life from waking until sleep."

A The best book writing itself, speaking is doing the work. I'd like to take a book to the Bluebird Seminar for early 05, in a conference with the Renegade Millionaire System (<http://www.renegademillionaire.com>). In brief, it depends; if traveling or at home, if working with a consulting client or coaching group on premises, or taking a day for scheduled phone appointments back to back, or writing without interruption. In other words, I have different types of days, structured differently. Most days I get up between 6:00 AM and 7:30 AM. If writing, I go right to work and stay at it for several hours before a break for a protein shake or food bar, vitamins. Almost every morning I at least write for an hour before switching to other pre-scheduled activities. Some mornings I go to the track and jog my racehorses, from 7:00 to 8:30 or 9:00 AM. On a lot of writing days or correspondence/FAX/office work days, I will work virtually non-stop and with no interruptions until 3:00 or 4:00 in the afternoon. On those days, I get an afternoon nap. On consulting or coaching group days, I'm in session 8:30 AM to 5:00 or 5:30 PM.

Almost all my phone conversations are by pre-set appointments. None of this varies from what I describe in the book, and expand on in the Renegade Millionaire System. I think what's probably most instructive is that I take a pre-determined, scheduled, time-blocked, deadline driven and disciplined approach. To appease your curiosity, evenings also vary. I have a habit on Sunday nights of watching TV (football in season, HBO, etc.) while sorting, reading the week's mail and FAXes (which arrive in one big box on Friday afternoon from my Phoenix office). Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings I am often racing horses. The other evenings may be social, relaxation, a movie, that sort of thing. I go to sleep as early as 10, as late as midnight. I do my level best to exercise 3 or 4 days a week, admittedly briefly. I only eat one "real meal" most days; protein shakes or food bars, the other two.

Q (From: Rick Grunden) "Is there a faster way to get books than through amazon, where there's a 3 to 4 week delay?"

A I answered this at great length in the SALES q/a. I'd add that there is no reason whatsoever for this delay other than amazon's own dysfunction, massive as far as I can tell. As alternate, BN.com, that is Barnes & Noble, or bookstores.

Q (From: Tami DePalma, www.marketability.com) "As a business owner, I have many personas. You speak of being militant with appointments you make with yourself. However, sometimes the wrong 'person' shows up for my scheduled time block! For example, what happens when the brilliant copywriter shows up when you've planned a big picture strategy time-block? Or your analyzer's nowhere to be found when you've blocked time to study P & L's?"

A Tami, I know you folks at Marketability. Nice to hear from you.

You sound like Sybill, and may need medication for multiple personality disorder.

I'm kidding. Fortunately, I very rarely experience your problem. My subconscious provides the right persona for the job time has been blocked for. I'm very good at compartmentalization, in part thanks to Psycho-Cybernetics skills, and I would suggest you check out www.psycho-cybernetics.com. It's my experience that the more "pre-organized" I am, the easier I shift. However, there are days I cheat. Three choices of things to work on pick the one I'm in the mood for. I also have a get-in-gear trick; I start with something I really enjoy, to get going. So, as a writer, I'll often give the first half-hour to one of my newsletters, then turn to a client's project.

Q (From: George Platt, www.hartynet.com) "Which came first: wealth or time management methods?"

A Money followed time effectiveness. My time management methods evolved over years, some out of necessity, and some, in a closed loop, out of necessity in managing increasing success and demand. But in essence, getting the grip on time is the precursor. Are there people who live in total chaos and complete lack of control who still make a ton of money? Sure. But if you want to play the odds, you'll

Q (From: Marc Labrecque) "How do you effectively handle high volume of e-mail without it killing your schedule?"

A When you read the book with regard to you, you'll discover detailed suggestions. But personally, as I describe in the book, I refuse to use it at all, and there is a rapidly growing underground of super successful entrepreneurs and CEO's who have dropped out of e-mail too. I hate "junk communication." If you, in any way, make it too easy to communicate with you, you're soon the puppet on their strings. With regard to any and all incoming: e-mail, Faxes, phone, mail, people, THE answer is: control it. Limit it. Restrict it. Schedule it. As I mentioned above, I get my entire weeks mail and 90% of my accumulated FAXes once, Friday, and I allocate two to three hours to it Sunday evening. Throughout the week I am free of it and even of the temptation to fool with it, because it is out of reach. People I deal with learn to plan far enough ahead to communicate knowing there will be lag time. I train them. Anyone who has a question like yours MUST, and I repeat MUST get and devour my book. Your sanity depends on it.

Q (From: Eric Josephson, Sioux Falls Tire & Service) "How do you suggest I set time blocks aside for myself to work on the business, but make my employees realize I am working, even though I'm not on the sales floor dealing with customers?"

A Well, odds are, you shouldn't be out there at all. Can't get to third base with one foot on first. As to the employees, tell me again, who's working for who? A good object lesson is having a good massage therapist come in once a week, conspicuously dragging her massage table, give you a massage in your office. It's simply none of their damned business what you're doing. They need to be reminded, their attention needs to be on what they're doing, and the daily, weekly, monthly benchmarks they're being judged on and rewarded on. You may need a place to go work away from the shop entirely. You can have a little meeting and splain things, like "My Job Description, "Your Job Description. And that'll have some effect, with some, for some time. But please also read my BUSINESS SUCCESS book, the section about employees. I've made the first there, last one out, set the example mistake. It's b.s.

Q (From: Dave @ ABS Group) "We have an online business where we provide many benefits for our members. We want to add unlimited e-mail questions what do you think of this from a time management perspective?"

A Dave, I love a good joke as much as anybody, but I can't risk anybody taking you seriously, so I guess I'll have to. If you are going to choose between this and a bullet, take the bullet. Quicker, less painful. But beyond the time issues, this is lousy marketing, poor positioning. You'll probably create expectations you can't honor, a very bad idea. You'll come to resent and dislike your customers. And maybe worst of all, unlimited access has zero value or added value. Only quantifiable, limited access has value. Take a look at the example of this, a coupon marked "void", one of my critique coupons, in the NO B.S. SALES book.

Q (From: Kevin Rappana) "How do you transition from a person who always makes time for the "do you have a minute questions" into one who does not, now that people expect it, without making waves?"

A It's you or them. Read my book and decide to hate time vampires with a passion. Then sit them down, individually or en group, and lay out the new rules, the new way Kevin's going to be working. Sell it as best you can as benefit to them as well as you. Then do it. Whoever's mad is mad, whoever leaves leaves. There's, what, 200 million people available? Vacuums fill. Clean 'em out. How delicate would you be about this if they were walking in and kicking you in the nuts?

Q (From: Rowan Wilson) "I've bought all three books had to go to two different bookstores to get that done. Now I want your "Ultimate Sales Letter" book but Borders and

A Aaaaargh. Here's the scoop, the Ultimate Sales Letter Book and the Ultimate Marketing Plan Book, both published by Adams Media, are in print, in most bookstores but not necessarily on any given day. The Ultimate Marketing Plan is also sold at most Kinkos, but they usually don't stock Sales Letter. Go figure. ALL my books can be special ordered for you by any bookstore, or ordered by you at BN.com or

Q ~~Ben, not Dan~~ (Lockwood, Blackacre Mortgage Corp.) "I'm in the mortgage business. I rely on realtors to refer me business. I anticipate heavy resistance to any attempt I will make to train them to respect my time"

A When howie. And the whole idea is about how he'd handle boys dating his teen-age daughter, he said he planned to shoot the first one dead and let the others take something to think about.

- Ultimate Sales Letter
- How To Make Millions With Your Ideas
- The New Psycho-Cybernetics

Then, please get Tracy Tolleson's number from my office, or better yet, ask Vicky to have him send you his info, and arrange a phone appointment with him. Like you, he gets his mortgage business from realtors. Unlike you, he has them totally trained and happy about it. And, of course, the new NO B.S. Business Success, Sales Success and Time Management books.

You are right once you've let the inmates run the asylum, it is challenging to change the way things are done. Same with trial Gold Membership, so you get my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER every month, especially since you're interested in sales letters and direct marketing. Do that at www.dankennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com>). marketing and the rules for new realtors who refer, and build up enough playing the new way; you can weed out the old ones that won't change.

Q (From: Lee Marcus) "What can employees do to optimize their time at work, given that their bosses expect immediate response?"

A The books title says "FOR ENTREPRENEURS."

Q (Benglasslaw.com) "Okay, Dan, the other lawyers in my office have been ordered to read all three books. Here is there collective question to me: Dan Kennedys stuff seems geared to the OWNER of the company how do we (worker bees) take command of our time when it is our job to react to things you give us to do?"

A Ben, the title says: FOR ENTREPRENEURS. For a reason. But, since you are the boss and you get it, you may be able to work with some of your team members to arrive at new, different, better ways to achieve team productivity. To a degree, it's a 2-way street. For example, just as you shouldn't want the "Have you got a minute? time vampires dropping by your office, you shouldn't want to be such a vampire destroying their productivity either. So you can all sign a pact to stop the bloodsucking. Instead, pre-set meetings. So, you and gang ought to go through the book(s) together and discuss what can help, what can't. With that said, though, the entrepreneur, the boss does need at least somebody who leaps when they whistle, who does set aside whatever they're doing to respond to the highest priced talent's needs. Pretty cool that they put you on the spot, huh?

Q (From: Jerry Doland, Jerrydoland@comcastnet) "I just recently discovered Dan Kennedy. I joined his Gold Membership, bought his Wealth Attraction Course, NO B.S. Letter archives. I'm getting all three books. How do I prioritize to get the most from all your great stuff, in minimum time?"

A 24 hours in a day. 8 to run your business, 8 for me, 8 for your personal life what's the problem? Actually, how 'bout an hour a day. Can include listening time in the car, too. Here's a minimum schedule: an hour a week just thinking about your business. An hour a week for education, like reading my stuff. But you'll increase, because you'll find time invested this way makes the other time more valuable. With me, you make your marketing, your sales take less time. You get your time better organized and protected. You liberate time. As to what first, what second, depends. On your greatest need, greatest interest. Of the items you listed, they have different purposes. The Wealth Attraction Course (can be purchased along with many of my other systems from www.DanKennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>)) is for immersion; listen, let it soak in. The NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER arrives every month and is set up for you to pick one or two things to do.

The books, why not a chapter a day find one thing a week to do, to incorporate into your way of doing things? By the way, thanks for the question. And geez, why on earth would ANYBODY who's been on these tele-seminars or read these books NOT at least get the 3-month's free Gold Membership, and test drive my NO B.S. MARKETING LETTER? Jerry, it'd shock you, but there actually are some people who have NOT done so. Crazy, right? (Go immediately to www.DanKennedy.com (<http://www.dankennedy.com/>) and grab it
